The ethnic nationalities in Myanmar

International Educational Development, Inc. and the Association of Humanitarian Lawyers have worked closely with the successive special rapporteurs on the situation in Myanmar since the term of the first one, Yozo Yokota. However, we regret that the current special rapporteur prefers to work without much input from non-governmental organizations. In our work on Myanmar have submitted numerous written statements and have twice been invited to submit testimony to the United States of America Congress on this topic.

Our attention to Myanmar has mainly focused on the situation of the ethnic nationalities. In the documents ending the rule of the the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the ethnic nationalities were given the option to opt out of what was to become the Union of Burma. However, the first Burman government unilaterally cancelled that option, and the ethnic nationalities have, for the most part, been seeking their autonomy or independence ever since. Most of them have their own military forces, and the government authorities are unable to enter into some of their territories. We have defended the right of the ethnic nationalities to pursue what they were promised in the decolonization documents. While there have been “peace” agreements with some of them over the years, most of these agreements have failed.

We have called attention to the violence against Rohingya Muslims in Myanmar in several written statements and raised it in the interactive dialogue with Special Rapporteur Lee at earlier sessions. We are pleased that the Council has undertaken specific action on this situation, including the independent fact-finding and referral of the situation to the General Assembly and the Security Council.

We note that the Special Rapporteur Lee provides limited discussion about other ethnic nationalities in her work. At present time, there are considerable problems with the situation in Shan State. Shan State has a population of about 5 million and has had its own military forces for many years. It functions in relative autonomy. While the government forces periodically seek to overtake the Shan forces, they have been unable to do so. However in the process, they have engaged in serious violations of human rights, including torture, rape and disappearances of Shan people and attempted confiscation of their lands. The officials of Shan State are forming a more complete government and are contemplating other acts to consolidate their traditional territory. They are also engaged in talks with other ethnic nationalities, especially the Kachin.

Government authorities continue clashes with the Kachin Independence Army forces and other Kachin militias. There are thousands of displaced Kachin fleeing government actions. The same is occurring with the Mon peoples and their Mon National Liberation Army. The government continues air strikes in these areas.

There are also clashes in Karen State with some spilling over into Thailand. The UN High Commissioner for Refugees has in the past estimated over 100,000 Karen refugees in Thailand. There are also periodic clashes between the Karenni and the federal government.

The ethnic Burman government has always disregarded the rights of the ethnic nationalities, and continues this under the leadership of Aung San Suu Kyi. Although she has indicated she wants to undertake peace processes with the ethnic nationalities, these have been feeble and have not forwarded sustainable peace. We urge the international community to ensure that States do not engage prematurely with the new authorities to the detriment of human rights.

Recommendations:

- 1. The Council should encourage the Special Rapporteur for Truth, Justice, Reparation, and Guarantee of Non-Recurrence to visit Myanmar to forward its national reconciliation.
- 2. All governments should recommit themselves to pressure the government of Myanmar to resolve its conflicts with ethnic nationalities peaceably and with deference to each group’s sovereignty and limit any economic or military cooperation with the authorities of Myannar until the human rights condition of that country has improved.
