D

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that the development of friendly relations among nations could lead to a strengthening of universal peace and the promotion of international cooperation in solving international problems,

Noting that the annual sessions of the General Assembly constitute the largest gathering of heads of State and Government and ministers for foreign affairs during the year,

Recognizing that bilateral meetings and direct contacts among Member States are important elements in helping to promote the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Convinced that the United Nations has an important role to play in facilitating such bilateral meetings and contacts among Member States,

1. Notes that existing facilities in the Indonesian and Chinese lounges have become inadequate for the holding of bilateral meetings and contacts among Member States during the annual sessions of the General Assembly;
