Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1, held its twenty-sixth session from 31 October to 11 November 2016. The review of Zimbabwe was held at the 5th meeting, on 2 November 2016. The delegation of Zimbabwe was headed by the Vice-President and Minister for Justice, Legal and Parliamentary Affairs, Emmerson D. Mnangagwa. At its 10th meeting, held on 4 November 2016, the Working Group adopted the report on Zimbabwe.

2. On 12 January 2016, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Zimbabwe: Kenya, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and the United Arab Emirates.

3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to Council resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Zimbabwe:

(a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/26/ZWE/1);

(b) A compilation prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/26/ZWE/2);

(c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/26/ZWE/3).

4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Belgium, Czechia, Germany, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America was transmitted to Zimbabwe through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the universal periodic review.

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The delegation reiterated the commitment of the Government of Zimbabwe to its human rights obligations and its appreciation for the universal periodic review mechanism.

6. Since the previous review, the National Steering Committee comprising of government and other multi-stakeholder representatives had been established. A national plan of action for the implementation of accepted recommendations had been adopted, with the National Steering Committee monitoring the process. A midterm report on the progress made in the implementation of recommendations had been submitted.

7. The effects of climate change had adversely affected the implementation of social and economic rights. The negative impact of the drought meant that resources had to be redirected away from national social programmes towards the provision of food to over 800,000 vulnerable households. Although the continued imposition of economic sanctions by some Western countries had severely limited the fiscal space and economic growth, compounding the challenges faced in mobilizing resources for social services, the Government had undertaken initiatives such as the Zimbabwe Agenda for Sustainable Socioeconomic Transformation, which was the economic blueprint for achieving sustainable and equitable economic and social development. A monitoring and evaluation framework had also been adopted, to measure development-related efforts.

8. In partnership with the World Bank, the Government had embarked on the ease of doing business project, to improve the international ranking of the country as a sound investment destination.

9. To ensure food security, the Government, in partnership with the private sector, had embarked on a special maize production programme.

10. Since the previous review, in 2013 Zimbabwe had adopted a new Constitution, which had been lauded for its foundational democratic elements and its expanded Declaration of Rights. The Constitution had brought about the establishment of the Constitutional Court. The alignment of all legislation was in progress. The Constitution obliged the Government to ensure that all international conventions, treaties and agreements to which Zimbabwe was a party would be incorporated into domestic law. In that regard, a “ratification and domestication strategy” had been adopted to accelerate the process of ratifying international instruments and incorporating them into domestic law.

11. Zimbabwe had ratified the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and its Optional Protocol, the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, and the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography. Reports had been submitted to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Committee on the Rights of the Child and the African Committee of Experts on the Rights and Welfare of the Child.

12. The Government had prioritized programmes aimed at promoting public awareness of human rights, which included radio broadcasts and exhibitions. The Constitution had been widely distributed, with abridged versions made available in eight languages and Braille. The Constitution had also been available on the government website.

13. The Government had achieved the institutionalization of the promotion of human rights through the establishment of the Zimbabwe Human Rights Commission. The Zimbabwe Media Commission and the Zimbabwe Gender Commission had become operational, while the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission had been further strengthened. Legislation enabling the National Peace and Reconciliation Commission to become operational was before Parliament.

14. Nine additional resident magistrates’ courts in six provinces had been established. Legislation to designate all magistrates’ courts as small claims courts was before Parliament. The legal aid programme had been decentralized.

15. The delegation responded to questions received in advance of the review. On the issue of early marriage, the delegation stated that the Constitution set the age of marriage at 18 years, which had been confirmed by the Constitutional Court. The marriage laws were being aligned with the Constitution.

16. On the issue of birth registration, the delegation stated that 206 birth registration sub-offices had opened. Schools too assisted pupils in obtaining birth certificates.

17. On the issue of food security, the delegation stated that drop-in centres had been established in five major towns, where food was distributed to children living in the streets. Food was also being distributed to orphans, children in rural areas, families headed by children and children with disabilities. The Home-grown School Feeding Programme for children in schools was being rolled out in phases starting with infant learners.

18. Progress had been made in decreasing the prevalence of HIV. The Elimination of Mother-to-Child Transmission Strategy for 2014-2018 focused on pregnant and lactating women, as well as on adolescent girls and young women. The Government would be launching a global framework on HIV prevention, care and treatment. National AIDS Trust Fund resources were being channelled towards prevention and community engagement in care and treatment, among other things. Youth-friendly corners were being established in health facilities to meet the needs of unmarried adolescents.
19. On the issue of child sexual abuse, the delegation stated that the legal and structural framework was sufficient to protect children from such abuse.
20. On the issue of the death penalty, the delegation recalled that, during the previous review, Zimbabwe had accepted recommendations to ratify the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty. However, during the consultative process for the drafting of the 2013 Constitution, the majority of the people had favoured retaining the death penalty, which had delayed ratification of the Optional Protocol. The 2013 Constitution nevertheless provided for the enactment of a law to restrict the use of the death penalty to men between 21 and 70 years of age convicted of aggravated murder. Nationwide campaigns on the effects of the death penalty were under way.
21. Although ratification of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment was still under consideration, the content of the Convention had been incorporated into the 2013 Constitution and into domestic law.
22. The disappearance of Itai Dzamara was being investigated and the authorities were working with his family and Zimbabwe Lawyers for Human Rights in that regard.
23. The National Peace and Reconciliation Commission would come into operation through passage of the National Peace and Reconciliation Commission bill, to be considered during the current session of Parliament.
24. All independent commissions were being funded directly from the Treasury, which had strengthened their independence. The Constitution guaranteed the independence of the commissions. The stringent and transparent process on the removal of commissioners from office guaranteed their tenure.
25. The Zimbabwe Electoral Commission was independent. The Government did not interfere with its operations and supported it in the discharge of its mandate.
26. The right of women to inherit or acquire land and other property was provided for in the law. Wives and daughters could inherit from the estates of their deceased husbands and fathers. Moreover, the Constitution called upon the Government to promote the full participation of women in all spheres, including in respect of land ownership, on an equal basis with men.
27. The mandate of the Zimbabwe Gender Commission included monitoring gender equality and investigating violations of rights relating to gender. The relevant laws were being aligned with the provisions of the 2013 Constitution, to ensure equal representation of women in all institutions. There was a legal framework in place to combat domestic violence.
28. It was not the policy of the Government to distribute food along partisan lines. The Government had adopted a zero-tolerance policy towards the politicization of food aid and had put into place stringent measures against such malpractice.
29. Whenever the prison population exceeded the holding capacity, inmates were transferred from closed prisons to spacious farm prisons. That measure was complemented by the periodic issuance by the President of clemency orders. A prisons and correctional service bill was being finalized to improve prison conditions, create community correctional centres and increase the number of correctional facilities.

30. The Interministerial Task Force on the Alignment of Legislation had been established and tasked with coordinating the alignment of all laws with the 2013 Constitution. In line with the Electoral Act, which had been revised by the General Laws Amendment Act, the Zimbabwe Electoral Commission had been made responsible for registering voters, compiling voters' rolls and registers and ensuring the proper custody and maintenance of the rolls. A polling station-based voter registration process had been established.

31. Criminal defamation was no longer a crime as it had been struck down by the Constitutional Court. Broadcasting licences for private broadcasters and commercial radio stations had been issued. Licences for community radio stations would be issued after the digitalization of broadcasting services.

32. The Interception of Communications Act was being revised to prevent the unauthorized collection, processing and transmission of personal data and the interception of communications.

33. The rights to freedom of expression, association and assembly were not absolute and must be exercised peacefully and with due respect for the rights of others. The Government would continue to ensure that those rights could be enjoyed by all without causing harm to or prejudicing the rights of others.

34. The enforcement of civil court orders was the responsibility of the Sheriff of the High Court and not of the police. However, where the Sheriff of the High Court was hindered in carrying out his duty, the police could be called upon to assist in maintaining peace and order.

35. With regard to the concern expressed about human rights abuses by the security forces, reported cases of such abuses were investigated and the alleged perpetrators were prosecuted. Moreover, victims could institute civil proceedings against the perpetrators. A new law was being drafted to provide for an independent mechanism to channel complaints against members of the security forces.

36. The delegation concluded its response to the questions received in advance of the review by emphasizing that Zimbabwe was committed to working with the special procedure mandate holders of the Human Rights Council. All outstanding requests for visits to the country would be considered on their merits.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

37. During the interactive dialogue, 86 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue are to be found in section II of the present report.

38. The Netherlands applauded the adoption by Zimbabwe of a new Constitution. The Netherlands was concerned by the increase in reported incidents infringing on the fundamental rights and freedoms enshrined in it.

39. New Zealand was concerned about the use of excessive force by government forces and called on Zimbabwe to ensure that the right to freedom of expression was respected and to support an open political space.

40. The Niger was pleased with the adoption of the 2013 Constitution and noted with satisfaction the strengthening of the legislative and institutional framework in the area of human rights.

41. Nigeria commended Zimbabwe for accepting the majority of the recommendations arising from its first review and acknowledged the national plan of action for their implementation. Nigeria was encouraged by the bold step taken by Zimbabwe on economic development.
42. Denmark expressed concern about the lack of freedom of assembly and association and the lack of space for civil society. It was also concerned about the absence of a constitutionally aligned policy framework for the justice institutions.
43. Pakistan welcomed the strengthening by Zimbabwe of its institutional human rights framework and noted the measures taken to promote the rights of children, women and persons with disabilities.
44. Uruguay expressed the hope that the 2013 Constitution would have a positive impact on the enjoyment of human rights by the people of Zimbabwe.
45. The Philippines welcomed the expansion of the Declaration of Rights in the 2013 Constitution. It was concerned that limited funding and a restricted mandate would impinge on the ability of the Zimbabwe Human Rights Commission to effectively monitor children's rights and receive and investigate complaints from children in a child-sensitive manner.
46. Portugal welcomed the ratification, since the first review, of two Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the establishment of a national human rights institution in accordance with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (the Paris Principles).
47. The Republic of Korea welcomed the adoption of the 2013 Constitution and the implementation of the Zimbabwe Agenda for Sustainable and Socioeconomic Transformation.
48. The Russian Federation noted the improvement in the legislative framework on human rights. It welcomed the establishment of interministerial committees to combat sexual violence and trafficking in persons and the steps taken to improve prison conditions.
49. Rwanda commended the efforts made by Zimbabwe to implement, under difficult conditions, the recommendations arising from its first review, as well as its efforts to promote gender equality and combat gender-based violence.
50. Senegal noted the progresses made by Zimbabwe since 2011 and welcomed the multipartite composition of the steering committee on the universal periodic review.
51. Serbia commended the participatory approach adopted by Zimbabwe in preparing its national report and encouraged it to continue aligning its laws with the new Constitution, including the Declaration of Rights.
52. Sierra Leone commended Zimbabwe for the adoption of a new Constitution and noted that harmful practices such as child marriage had been banned.
53. Slovenia appreciated the presentation of the national report and commended Zimbabwe for the efforts made since its previous review.
54. South Africa recognized the progress made by Zimbabwe in promoting and protecting human rights despite the economic sanctions, which had severely constrained its ability to implement its human rights obligations.
55. South Sudan recognized that Zimbabwe was cooperating with the international human rights mechanisms and called upon the international community to support it with financial and technical assistance.

56. Spain highlighted the importance of implementing the Domestic Violence Act and regretted the temporary suspension of the right to demonstrate, which was recognized in section 59 of the 2013 Constitution.
57. The Sudan commended Zimbabwe for its positive engagement with the universal periodic review and appreciated the positive steps taken since the previous review, despite the economic challenges caused by the economic sanctions imposed by some Western countries.
58. Swaziland commended Zimbabwe for strengthening and, where necessary, creating the institutions to implement the recommendations received in 2011. It also congratulated Zimbabwe for outlawing child marriage.
59. Sweden thanked Zimbabwe for replying to the questions it had transmitted in advance of the review. It noted that the alignment of national laws with the new Constitution had been slow and, in parts, unsystematic.
60. Switzerland stated that the implementation of the new Constitution was of particular importance in the light of violations of the rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly.
61. The Syrian Arab Republic welcomed the commitment by the Government to accord priority at the policy level to the development of human rights.
62. Thailand welcomed the adoption of the 2013 Constitution and the ratification of several human rights treaties, including the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.
63. The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia asked for an update on measures taken to ratify the Convention against Torture.
64. Timor-Leste welcomed the enactment of the Sexual Offences Act, the constitutional provision establishing the age of majority at 18 years and the prohibition of forced marriages.
65. Togo welcomed the creation of new institutions, including the Constitutional Court, the National Prosecuting Authority of Zimbabwe, the Zimbabwe Gender Commission and the National Peace and Reconciliation Commission.
66. Tunisia welcomed the measures taken to promote human rights, particularly the ratification of international human rights instruments, and the steps taken to implement recommendations from the first cycle of the universal periodic review.
67. Turkey appreciated the legislative improvements in protecting human rights. It welcomed the adoption of policies on gender and children and of the Zimbabwe Gender Commission Act.
68. Uganda urged the unconditional lifting of the damaging economic sanctions. It noted that Zimbabwe was experiencing food insecurity but lacked capacity in social protection.
69. Ukraine was concerned about the use of excessive force against peaceful demonstrators and regretted that the Zimbabwe Gender Commission and the National Peace and Reconciliation Commission were not operational.
70. The United Kingdom called for an investigation into concerns regarding political violence and the partisan distribution of food aid, and for the prosecution of alleged perpetrators.
71. The United Republic of Tanzania commended achievements, notably the adoption of the new Constitution and the establishment of the Constitutional Court and of a number of commissions.

72. The United States expressed concern about restrictions on the freedoms of expression and assembly, about the increase in politically motivated violence and about the failure to hold security forces accountable.
73. Panama noted that climate change was a threat to rights related to the environment and encouraged Zimbabwe to promote a greener economy.
74. The Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela noted efforts to improve the quality of education and initiatives to provide housing and support the owners of small farms.
75. Zambia commended action taken to implement recommendations from the universal periodic review, particularly the bringing together of stakeholders in the development of a national plan of action to implement the recommendations arising from the previous review.
76. Algeria welcomed the new Constitution and the efforts made to protect children and encouraged Zimbabwe to implement its national policy on the rights of the child.
77. Angola noted that the Government had implemented macroeconomic measures to overcome the unjust sanctions imposed on Zimbabwe and welcomed cooperation with the human rights mechanisms.
78. Argentina urged the Government to make progress in aligning its national legislation with its international obligations and continue acceding to human rights treaties.
79. Armenia welcomed the steps taken on human rights education and awareness-raising. It was concerned about the sexual abuse and harassment of girls on their way to school.
80. Australia commended the adoption of a new Constitution and supported the Zimbabwe Human Rights Commission. It was concerned about freedom of expression and assembly.
81. Bangladesh noted steps to implement the recommendations received during the first review and encouraged Zimbabwe to sustain the momentum. It noted the challenges faced by the Government, including HIV/AIDS and capacity constraints.
82. Belarus congratulated Zimbabwe on its new Constitution based on the rule of law, among other principles, and the ratification of several human rights instruments.
83. Belgium welcomed the adoption of the new Constitution. It remained concerned about the persistence of laws and practices that were harmful to women and children.
84. Botswana highlighted the challenges posed by high rates of maternal, neonatal and child mortality, as well as of stunting and malnutrition among children under 5 years of age.
85. Brazil noted the adoption of the new Constitution. It encouraged the continued alignment of national legislation with the Constitution and international law.
86. Burundi noted the strengthening of the legislative institutional framework, the human rights awareness-raising and training policies, efforts to incorporate human rights instruments into domestic law and the reforms to the judicial sector.
87. Canada was concerned about reports of reprisals against critics of the Government. It stressed the importance for the Government to protect freedom of expression.
88. Chile welcomed the commitment by Zimbabwe to protect human rights with the adoption of the 2013 Constitution and the acceptance of the recommendations from the 2011 universal periodic review. It encouraged the adoption of measures to honour the commitment.

89. China commended the adoption of the new Constitution. It welcomed the adoption of policies to promote development. China expressed concern over the economic sanctions that were in place and called upon the international community to assist Zimbabwe with development.

90. The Congo noted that Zimbabwe had consolidated its institutional framework by codifying it in the new Constitution. It commended Zimbabwe for the ratification of relevant international instruments.

91. Costa Rica was concerned about the prevalence of patriarchal attitudes and practices that violate the rights of women, the existence of discrimination and the lack of access to education and health services.

92. Cuba stated that, despite the human rights challenges that had been worsened by the unilateral coercive measures imposed on the country, Zimbabwe had made significant progress with, among other things, the adoption of the Constitution.

93. Czechia expressed its appreciation for the informative presentation, which included responses to some of the questions transmitted in advance of the review.

94. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea requested to know about the impact of economic sanctions on the enjoyment of human rights, particularly in the field of public health.

95. Norway welcomed the presentation by Zimbabwe of its national report. It noted with concern the high number of arrests of human rights defenders and peaceful protesters and the continued restrictions on freedom of expression.

96. Djibouti noted the measures taken since the previous review, particularly the ratification of human rights treaties. It welcomed the adoption of the new Constitution.

97. Ecuador expressed the hope that the adoption and implementation of the 2013 Constitution and of updated laws, as well as the establishment of relevant national institutions, would strengthen democracy and the human rights system.

98. Egypt acknowledged the enactment of the 2013 Constitution, which contained safeguards for human rights. It commended the establishment of institutions and frameworks to protect human rights.

99. Ethiopia commended the wider institutional infrastructure and the policy measures taken to protect human rights. It welcomed the launch of the Zimbabwe Agenda for Sustainable Socioeconomic Transformation Plan for the period 2013-2018.

100. France welcomed the measures taken since the first review, especially the adoption of the Constitution, which enshrined fundamental freedoms, and the ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

101. Germany expressed concern about the fact that many laws had not yet been aligned with the new Constitution and that, in practice, human rights were repeatedly violated by State officials and security forces.

102. Ghana commended Zimbabwe for establishing the Constitutional Court, the National Prosecuting Authority of Zimbabwe, the Zimbabwe Gender Commission and the National Peace and Reconciliation Commission through the adoption of its 2013 Constitution.

103. Guatemala recognized the efforts made by Zimbabwe to promote and protect human rights and its establishment of the Zimbabwe Human Rights Commission. It was concerned that the latter lacked sufficient human and financial resources.

104. The Holy See noted the Zimbabwe Agenda for Sustainable Socioeconomic Transformation, the non-formal education policy, the Trafficking in Persons Act and the Interministerial Task Force on Human Trafficking.

105. India urged Zimbabwe to align its laws with the 2013 Constitution, strengthen the juvenile courts, increase the minimum age of criminal responsibility and reduce gender-based segregation and the wage gap.

106. Indonesia welcomed the adoption of the new Constitution, which, it noted, prohibited torture and upheld the right to personal security and migrants' rights.

107. The Islamic Republic of Iran noted the adoption of the new Constitution in 2013, the enactment of the 2014 Trafficking in Persons Act and the creation of the Interministerial Task Force on Human Trafficking.

108. Iraq commended Zimbabwe for the measures taken to implement the recommendations from the first review and the adoption of the new Constitution.

109. Ireland encouraged the alignment of legislation with the Constitution. It was concerned by the high rate of child marriage and welcomed the Constitutional Court's ruling that child marriage was unconstitutional.

110. Italy welcomed the reviewed national gender policy, while noting the draft national child rights policy and the absolute prohibition of torture.

111. Japan urged Zimbabwe to strengthen the rule of law and implement the Zimbabwe Agenda for Sustainable Socioeconomic Transformation. It welcomed the constitutional prohibition of child and forced marriage.

112. Kenya commended Zimbabwe for its efforts to implement the recommendations arising from the first cycle of the universal periodic review and its commitment to the human rights mechanisms. It encouraged Zimbabwe to pursue that approach.

113. Libya noted efforts to implement the accepted recommendations from the first review. It also noted reforms in the judicial system, including the establishment of the Constitutional Court.

114. Madagascar commended Zimbabwe for ratifying several international human rights instruments and adopting its 2013 Constitution, which strengthened guarantees in respect of civil, political, social and cultural rights.

115. Maldives commended Zimbabwe for its engagement in the universal periodic review process and its adoption of the 2013 Constitution, which was founded on human rights and the rule of law.

116. Mauritius welcomed the adoption by Zimbabwe of the 2013 Constitution, including the expanded Declaration of Rights, its achievements in women's rights and the guarantees provided regarding the right to education.

117. Mexico invited Zimbabwe to continue cooperating with the special procedure mandate holders of the Human Rights Council and the treaty bodies. It welcomed the fact that the new Constitution set the age of majority at 18 years.

118. Montenegro noted the concerns regarding domestic and sexual violence and requested to know about the activities undertaken to bring perpetrators to justice and provide assistance to victims.

119. Morocco welcomed the adoption of the new Constitution in 2013 and noted with satisfaction the ratification of several conventions.

120. Mozambique welcomed the key national priorities, initiatives and commitments to improve human rights. It encouraged Zimbabwe to continue to engage with key institutions and appealed for the lifting of sanctions on Zimbabwe.

121. Myanmar acknowledged the positive steps taken to increase respect for the rights of citizens. It noted the promotion of health-care services and the development of rehabilitation services.

122. Namibia encouraged Zimbabwe to ensure that the Organ for National Healing, Reconciliation and Integration fully implemented its mandate and to also ensure the effectiveness and independence of the National Peace and Reconciliation Commission.

123. Israel noted that many of the reports of Zimbabwe to the human rights monitoring mechanisms were overdue.

124. The delegation of Zimbabwe, in response to questions, stated that Western-imposed sanctions had led to a general decline in health-care service delivery, especially in maternal and child nutrition. The sanctions had also slowed down the economy and had resulted in brain drain, which had affected service delivery.

125. An interministerial committee on human rights and international humanitarian law had been established to prepare State party reports. A number of reports had been drafted and would be submitted in due course.

126. The right to free basic education would be progressively achieved as resources become available. In the interim, parents were funding their children's education within their means. Where parents did not have the means to fund their children's education, the Government, together with development partners, provided funding under the Basic Education Assistance Module.

127. In 2010, a women's development fund had been established to enable women to access funds without collateral. A women's microfinance bank was in the process of being set up. Also, a financial inclusion strategy had been adopted to ensure that financial institutions developed products tailored to the needs of women.

128. A national policy on domestic water and sanitation had been launched in 2013. Work was under way to assess the need in urban areas and to install and restore boreholes in rural areas.

129. There were no political prisoners. As regards the death penalty, 90 inmates were on death row and no executions had taken place for over a decade. Ten petitions for clemency had recently been granted. A paper on the abolition of the death penalty would be prepared for debate.

130. The Government was mindful of the imperative need for constitutional, legislative and administrative measures that were in line with international human rights instruments and standards.

II. Conclusions and/or recommendations
